Letter from the Library Director

As we approached the 250th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, I began to wonder what influenced those who wrote our nation's founding document, so naturally, I turned to the Library.

I discovered The Pursuit of Happiness by Jeffrey Rosen, which offered a new perspective on what was meant by that phrase.

I was surprised to learn that it wasn't referring to pleasure or material comfort, but to both our right and our responsibility to pursue self-improvement, lifelong learning, and the cultivation of virtue. To our founders, the pursuit of happiness meant having the opportunity to become your best self and to contribute as a more engaged, informed, and connected citizen.

As I reflected on this, I saw a clear connection between this ideal and the work of public libraries today.

Public libraries offer free and open access to knowledge, ideas, and experiences that expand understanding and encourage learning. Whether someone is exploring a new idea, building a skill, or seeking reliable information, libraries support the kind of growth our founders envisioned. In doing so, they also play an important role in a healthy democracy by helping people stay informed and engaged in their communities.

As we mark this anniversary, I'm reminded how much the vision set forth 250 years ago in the Declaration of Independence is supported by institutions that expand knowledge and foster personal growth. The Glenview Public Library is proud to help carry that work forward, making it possible for each person to learn, grow, and pursue a deep and meaningful kind of happiness.

News & Announcements

Learning Comes to Life in the New Play Space

At Glenview Public Library, we believe play is a powerful part of learning and an essential foundation for early childhood development. Thanks to the generous support of donors through the Glenview Public Library Foundation's Play Space Campaign, we're excited to introduce a newly designed play space where children and caregivers can learn, explore, and grow together.

As Fred Rogers said, "Play is really the work of childhood." Through play, children make sense of the world around them—building physical skills, developing language, and practicing important social skills like sharing, cooperating, and making friends.

In our new space, learning comes to life through both play and books. After a storytime about first responders, children might dress up as firefighters and police officers. Books about animals extend into imaginative play in the animal hospital. Early concepts like colors, numbers, and shapes are reinforced as children build with wooden blocks and Magna-Tiles at the light table. In these moments, reading and play come together to spark curiosity, discovery, and joy.

The space has been thoughtfully designed by our Youth Services Librarians, who specialize in early childhood development, to encourage caregivers to play alongside their children. Face-out picture book shelving, organized by subject and located near the play area, makes it easy to find books that match a child's interests. Prompts throughout the space help caregivers start conversations that build vocabulary and support children in expressing their ideas.

Families can also look forward to rotating themes that keep the experience fresh and engaging. Each quarter, librarians will update the space based on their observations and the interests shared by children and caregivers. A changing selection of toys, games, costumes, and puppets will introduce topics like community helpers and the natural world.

We invite you to visit the new play space, spend time exploring together, and experience the joy of learning through play. This summer, dive into all things water through our featured theme. Have an idea for how we can improve our play space? Please share your suggestions with our librarians.

Youth Services Play Space is officially open!

Thank you to our donors, community partners, and everyone who joined us for the ribbon-cutting celebration for the Library’s new play space. We are thrilled to have helped fund the transformation of the children’s area into a vibrant place for learning and play—the first major update to the department since the library was built in 2010.

Thanks to the generosity of our donors, the Foundation also proudly supports two signature Library programs each year:

Glenview Reads Together ($9,000)

In April, the Library welcomed author Nickolas Butler for a community conversation about A Forty Year Kiss, this year’s Glenview Reads Together selection. The event, supported by the Glenview Public Library Foundation, drew a crowd of enthusiastic readers. Our special luncheon also gave a small group of book lovers the chance to hear more about Butler’s writing process.

Special thanks to Vittoria Logli for sponsoring the luncheon.

Summer Reading Program
($3,000)

A favorite tradition for readers of all ages, the Summer Reading Program helps students maintain their literacy skills over the summer while inspiring a love of reading at every level.

Special thanks to Glenview Bank & Trust, A WinTrust Community Bank, for sponsoring the program.
